promotes an interdisciplinary research and teaching approach to address problems of importance to the agricultural community.

Students are encouraged to develop innovative solutions to problems through research, and to strengthen skills and expand knowledge by taking advantage of the diverse resource base and research opportunities of the University of Colorado at Boulder. Students are encouraged to use their academic expertise to resolve such issues as groundwater contamination, invasive species, habitats and threatened species, and food production. The community's need to secure and maintain access to clean and safe water is a primary driving force behind research in the
